Introduction to Section 106 Review

This up-to-date two-day introductory course will help you understand how Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act (NHPA) protects historic properties. Because Section 106 requires special review of federal and federally assisted activities that could affect historic properties, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation - the agency that administers Section 106 review - has designed this course to help you understand and anticipate historic preservation responsibilities under the Council's new regulations, which went into effect on January 11, 2001.

Introduction to Section 106 Review - which replaces the Council's earlier three-day course, Introduction to Federal Projects & Historic Preservation Law - teaches the basic steps of the Section 106 review process and how Section 106 review is implemented under the new regulations issued by the Advisory Council at 36 CFR Part 800.

Participants in our introductory courses represent many branches of federal, state, tribal and local government, as well as the private sector, since Section 106 review applies to so many types of projects and programs. These include construction of buildings, roads, and structures; grants for housing and urban revitalization; land and property management; and activities involving federal licenses, permits, loans and loan guarantees.
